River Carry Me Home: Thanksgiving with the American Sound
Thursday, November 26 at 6 p.m. on WXXI Classical
Rivers are special; many are even considered sacred. They carry rain from fields and replenish the sea. They wander as watery conduits from one point to another, sometimes even between exile and home. Like rivers, our lives wander, too—and as the 17th-century Japanese poet Basho wrote, the journey itself is home. As we gather with family and friends this Thanksgiving, enjoy an hour of music that reaches the heart of what it means to wander through the world like a river carving its course, and what it means to come home.

Calling seniors! Got a story to tell? NPR wants to hear it!

Are you 65 or older, with a story to tell? If so, NPR wants to hear from you! Consider submiting your story in podcast form for a chance to hear it on NPR

The roughly 60 million Americans age 65 and older make up the fastest-growing segment of the U.S. population.

At this point in life you've clocked a lot of miles and gained some experience along the way — and no doubt some stories to tell.

NPR would like to hear those stories. Stories of love, of family, of finance and health. Memories of the past — or fears and hopes for the future.

To learn more — including how to submit — visit WXXI.org/events. Deadlne is November 30.
